Dr. Taylor Smith

Research Profile

My ongoing research is focused on monitoring global vegetation systems, quantifying the resilience of natural ecosystems to climate change, and understanding the hydrology of alpine regions. My methods are data-driven and rely on the combination of high-performance computing and novel statistical methods to explore changes in the Earth system.

Education

2018 Dr. rer. nat. (summa cum laude), Remote Sensing, Universität Potsdam, Germany

2014 Master of Arts, Geography, UC Santa Barbara, USA

2011 Bachelor of Arts, Geology, Middlebury College, USA

Professional Experience

2018 – Research Staff and Lecturer, Universität Potsdam, Germany

2014–2018 PhD Candidate and Teaching Assistant, Universität Potsdam, Germany

2013–2018 Independent Consultant, Climate Hazard Analysis for International Development, Remote

Summer 2013 Natural Hazards Research Fellow, Earth Research Institute, USA

2012–2014 MA Candidate and Teaching Assistant, UC Santa Barbara, USA

2011–2012 GIS Analyst, Tetra Tech ARD, USA

Summer 2010 Field Researcher, UMass Amherst, USA

2009–2011 Research and Teaching Assistant, Middlebury College, USA

Funding

2023–2026 DFG: Principle Investigator, "Quantifying the Influence of Snowmelt on River Hydrology in High Mountain Asia" (EUR 365k)

2019–2022 BMBF: Postdoctoral Fellow, "Options for Sustainable Land Use Adaptations in Savanna Systems" (ORYCS)

2013 ERI: Natural Hazards Research Fellow, "Mapping Glacial Lake Outburst Floods in the Himalaya" (USD 5k)

Awards, Honors, and Certifications

2021 International Teaching Professional (U. Potsdam) – Training for University Pedagogy.

2018 Michelson Prize (U. Potsdam) – Awarded for the top doctoral thesis of the year in the Math and Science Faculty at Universität Potsdam.

2018 Prize for Excellence in Teaching (U. Potsdam) – Awarded for excellent teaching at the graduate level. Assessed based on course design, innovation, and student reviews.
